International Conference on "The German Labor Market in a Globalized World: Trade, Technology and Demographics"

International Conference

Call for Papers

The conference focuses on technology, trade and demographic changes and the ways they interact with employment, wages, and participation in the labor market, with a particular emphasis on the role of institutions. Understanding these relationships is key for an assessment of the macroeconomic performance of the labor market and for the design of effective labor market policies.

We invite empirical and theoretical contributions on these topics from all areas of economics and sociology with a focus on labor, education, health, or human resource management.
